All Saints at top of the class

BULL Creek school All Saints' College has again been recognised as one of the country's leading independent schools after being nominated for two consecutive years in two categories by the Australian Education Awards committee.

The co-educational college has been shortlisted in the national categories of Secondary School of the Year – Non-government and Best School Strategic Plan. Principal Belinda Provis said the recognition reflected the school's staff and community's commitment to innovation and new ways of thinking.

"The college is united behind Benang: Strategic Plan 2019 – 2023 which, at its core, lays out a roadmap for our community to strive towards achieving our vision of making a positive difference in the world," she said.

"The plan's consultation process was wide and deep, and subsequently sought to foster a culture of innovation and entrepreneurship across the college's curriculum and business operations.

"The resulting plan has inspired and guided us as we nurture and support young people who, armed with a strong academic foundation and suite of life skills, a clear set of values and a positive sense of their own sense of efficacy, continue to thrive, seeing themselves as capable agents of change."
